DEPARTMENT 1 · DEVELOPMENT AND IT · PROFESSION 9

Branding designer

Profession 9 of 10 in Development and IT.

What the profession means

A branding designer builds the whole identity of a business: name, logo, colour, type, voice and the rules that keep every touchpoint consistent.

What professionals do every day

Researches the market and brand, defines personality and positioning, creates the identity system, writes the brand guide and supports rollout.

Why businesses hire them, and what problems they solve

Consistent branding builds trust and recognition. A brand system lets the business grow without each new asset becoming a new design project.

- Inconsistent logos and colours across channels.
- Brands that do not stand out.
- Guidelines that nobody can follow.

Skills you need

- Brand strategy and positioning.
- Logo systems and typography.
- Colour systems with contrast checks.
- Brand guidelines writing.

Client-ready portfolio project

A complete brand system for a fictional clinic: positioning, logo, palette with contrast checks, type scale, voice sheet and an eight-page guide.

Worked example

Worked example. A clinic's positioning is 'calm, precise, local'. Each choice follows from that: soft colours, a plain sans-serif, short sentences in the voice sheet.

Assignment with full solution

ASSIGNMENT

Palette with accessibility checks

Business problem: A clinic brand needs a palette that works on screens and passes contrast checks.

Steps

1. Pick a primary colour, a dark text colour and a soft background.
2. Check each text pair with the contrast checker (see the Design foundations).
3. Adjust any pair that fails until it passes AA.
4. Record the final values in the guide.

Expected output: A palette, a pass table and a brand guide page.

SOLUTION (ANSWER KEY)

The checker shows which pairs pass. Any failing pair is adjusted rather than used with a note to 'be careful'. The final palette is recorded with hex values and the passing ratios.

Common mistakes

- Choosing trendy colours that fail accessibility.
- Guides with no examples.
- Logo rules missing for small sizes.
- Rollout without training the team.

Freelancing opportunities
