Profession 12 of 10 in Development and IT.

What the profession means

An influencer marketer plans and manages partnerships with creators who reach a specific audience, with clear briefs, disclosure and measurable results.

What professionals do every day

Finds creators whose audience fits, negotiates terms, writes briefs, checks disclosure, tracks links and codes, and reports results.

Why businesses hire them, and what problems they solve

- Creators whose audience does not match the product.
- Undisclosed paid posts.
- Results that cannot be traced.

Skills you need

- Audience research and creator vetting.
- Briefing and contracts.
- Disclosure rules.
- Tracking with codes and links.

Client-ready portfolio project

A creator campaign plan for a fictional shop: vetting table, brief, disclosure requirement, tracking codes and a results template.

Worked example

Worked example. Three micro-creators with local audiences each get a code: the code with the most redemptions shows which audience responds, and it informs the next brief.

Assignment with full solution

ASSIGNMENT

Creator vetting and brief

Business problem: A shop wants three creators for a launch.

Steps

1. Score five creators on audience fit, engagement and past sponsorships.
2. Pick three and write a brief with the message and disclosure.
3. Assign a unique code to each.
4. Compare redemptions after two weeks.

Expected output: A vetting table, the brief and the result template.

SOLUTION (ANSWER KEY)

Vetting uses the audience, not follower count alone. The unique codes make results traceable per creator.

Common mistakes

- Choosing creators by follower count only.
- Scripts that read like adverts.
- No disclosure.
- No tracking.

Freelancing opportunities

- Creator campaigns for local and e-commerce brands.
- Influencer briefs and results reports.
- Briefs for 'influencer marketing', 'creator partnership'.
