PART 1 · MODULE B

Working with AI: help, limits and the editor's checklist

Use AI as a tool; keep the responsibility.

B1. Where AI helps

AI can suggest outlines, alternatives to a weak sentence and a first rough draft. You decide what is true, what suits the client, and what is kept.

B2. Where AI fails

- It can state invented facts, quotes and sources with confidence.
- It tends towards generic phrases a reader has seen many times.
- It does not know the client's customers, rules or history unless you tell it.

B3. The AI content editor's checklist

1. Check every number, name, date and quote against a source.
2. Remove claims you cannot support (for example 'best', 'guaranteed', 'number one').
3. Replace generic openings with one specific detail.
4. Read it aloud; cut anything you would not say.
5. Record what you changed and why.

B4. Prompt library (starter)

Task	Prompt pattern
Outline	Give me an outline for a 600-word article for [reader] about [topic]. They should leave knowing [one action].
Simplify	Rewrite this paragraph at a school-year-9 reading level without losing any fact: [text]
Tighten	Cut this by 30 percent. Keep every number. List what you removed.
Resume bullet	Rewrite this bullet to start with an action verb and include the result I give: [bullet]. Do not invent numbers.
Fact check list	List every factual claim in this text as a numbered list I can verify.
Tone	Rewrite for a friendly, plain tone for [reader]. Keep the meaning identical.

Always read the output critically. Never submit AI text you have not checked.

Part of Master Freelancing: Writing and Content. Back to the chapter list on skillnavora.in · Open the full textbook. Official links in this chapter were not checked live; confirm before relying on them.